Part1: Centrality measures

We will perform a handful of centrality analyses to help us answer the following questions: Q1: What are the most central essential subreddits (betweenness)? Q2: What are the most well connected subreddits (closeness)?

We will also look at temporal centrality, degree centrality and eigenvector centrality to give us a big picture of the dataset

Part2: REM Analysis

Since we have a very big dataset, we aim on running one model that can help us evaluate 2 hypotheses. A big factor that drove us to take this direction is that given such a big dataset, we do not have enough computing power to fit an REM model over such a big dataset. We wanted to strike a balance between the number of factors we wanted to analyze including reciprocity, repetition and preferential attachment as well as the number of subreddits we actually analyze. We still need a sizable chunk to look at without sacrificing robustness. With this in mind, we chose to look at interactions during the period of the national conventions as it is a time when: a. There is a clear political candidate from all political parties involved b. Everyone is tuning in to listen to political candidates and other political figures speak during these conventions so there are bound to be discussions on what they said

The questions we aim to answer will be answered using hypotheses that we formulated. We followed the examples from our lab as they were well formed and most related to the dataset we have. Below are the hypotheses we aim to answer:

1. The likelihood of a subreddit, a, to interact with another subreddit, b, is greater when subreddit a has a similar general sentiment as subreddit b.

During election years, candidates can utilize the results of this question to find out how widely shared certain topics are based on their sentiments. If there are more links from one subreddit to another with a negative sentiment, the candidate could identify frustrations in the target population to address with their campaign.

2. The likelihood of a subreddit, a, receiving an additional connection to another subreddit, b, is greater the more connections that subreddit a already has.

This is helpful in order for campaign analysts not to cast such a wide net. If they can find influential subreddits which are in turn connected to other smaller subreddits, then the target subreddit is to some extent guaranteed to be a great source of widely talked about information. This will be particularly helpful during campaign analysis when a candidate is looking to talk about issues that affect the public

Plot interactions between political affiliated groups and factions during the 10 day convention period

We want to see how some of these groups interacted with each other, the general sentiment of their interactions. Once again, due to the size of the data set we had to filter out specific subreddits to put into our visualization. This can be used as a template by our client to plot more specifically themed relationships. We can also incorporate sentiments between edges to see what the general sentiment during the national convention period.

Communication Events Network

Edges colored by sentiment

We see that the general sentiment between subreddits is positive. This is a surprising find as we had initially assumed that there would be more negative sentiment in posts between these politically affiliated subreddits as they center around opposing presidential candidates and candidates that ran for presidential primaries like Bernie Sanders.

We will have the model analyse 4 different factors for the sake of completeness and to help us have context when singling out the estimates which will answer our question. There may be a case where a simple model that only analyses the factors we need (total degree received and covariance) may produce different results compared to when we look at additional factors like repetition and reciprocity. The main reason we chose to run one complex model as opposed to 2 models, a simple and a complex model is because of the sheer amount of computing power we need to run just one model.

Let's see what the data looks like in a network graph
